

Coin Board News

Number 13 — January 2010

MARKET ACTIVITY There was lessened activity during the final quarter of last year, as so many people in the coin business and hobby were distracted by the bullion market. Coin boards can't quite compete with gold at a time of economic uncertainty, though I'm always on the lookout for a good board deal. Sadly, I was able to make no important purchases in recent months, though you'll find a few new goodies on my current price list #113.

I came tantalizingly close to buying a nice Earl & Koehler board for Lincoln Cents, but the deal ultimately fell through. I was contacted by someone who was selling a nearly complete set of Lincolns 1909-39 housed in a well preserved E & K board. The buyer was evidently interested only in the coins, and I made a generous offer on the board. As sometimes happens, once the buyer became aware of the board's value, he decided to keep it, too. Though likely a duplicate for my own collection, it would have been a nice item to place with one of my customers.

I picked up a dozen or so boards at the St. Louis show in October. While there were some nice list items in this group, I can't report any new discoveries from that source. Both the Baltimore and Houston shows also turned up a few coin boards, but these were common pieces in poor condition, and I simply passed on them.

I've bought only a single coin board on eBay in the past year (see Coin Board News #12), but I continue to sell boards through this venue. These are generally items in lesser grades than those offered on my own lists, which accounts for the sometimes low prices that they realize. As with coins, the grade of a coin board is very significant in determining its value, and I've not been able to find really choice items in internet auctions.

BOOK UPDATES After some really exhilarating new discoveries reported in the past couple issues of Coin Board News, this installment is a bit tame by comparison, though it's still significant. Yet another Oberwise board variety has surfaced, this being a very early printing from 1938. O10¢Ac is a board for Liberty Head Dimes having the same broad font in its title described in my book for O10¢Bc. It's not surprising that these boards are similar, since their back varieties make them contemporary with one another, but any Oberwise board having this distinctive, broad font is a rarity. The newly discovered board has the correct concluding date printed directly onto its face, which adds to the mystery of O10¢Ae, described in my book as having a pastedown with the date 1916 over whatever lies underneath. Perhaps, it was simply a mismatched font rather than the wrong date I speculated. Short of mutilating the example in my own collection, I'll likely never know.

PUBLISHING SCHEDULE These days I'm directing most of my hobby energy toward preparing a book on coin folders and albums that will be similar in content to my current book on coin boards. This is an even larger project than the first, one that's taking nearly all of my spare time, so I'll be scaling back my schedule of newsletters and price lists. I hope to get these out quarterly, but you should still contact me directly about any particular items you're seeking. In the meantime, the current list is a bit smaller than usual, and it's devoted to Whitman boards exclusively.

ON THE ROAD AGAIN I'll be manning the NGC booth at the FUN Show in Orlando January 6-10. I'll also be at the Long Beach Show February 4-6, the Whitman Show in Baltimore, March 4-6 and the ANA Money Show in Fort Worth March 26-27. Please stop by if you're going to any of these events.

Check List and Value Guide

2010

Market Analysis: The slow economy of 2009 was felt all over, but its effect on the coin board market has been minimal. There has been some sales resistance for the higher value items, while buyers remain eager for lesser quality and common boards priced right. My eBay sales have been vigorous, but a handful of serious collectors have stepped up to buy the better list items on the few occasions when they've been available.

I made only one big purchase of boards in 2009, though there were several good acquisitions of a dozen boards or less each scattered throughout the year. I've tried to put out some choice pieces in each list, but the best boards always go to want list customers. Those that don't get bought immediately are simply tucked away by me for the future. I believe in the long term value of scarce and choice boards.

Increases are probably warranted in the accompanying Check List & Value Guide, yet I've decided not to change anything this time around. The economy really hasn't recovered, at least not at the street level, and hobbyists are being careful in their purchases.

Kent Company — The most notable story of the past year has been the discovery of K1¢B2a, which has the title shown in silhouette on light blue paper within a printed masthead of navy blue. Though previously unknown, it should have been anticipated, since a similar board exists for Indian Head Cents. To date, just two examples are known of the Indian board and only three of the Lincoln board. I sold a number of nice Kent boards in 2009, but toward the end of the year the supply dried up completely. With the exception of the most common varieties of Lincoln Cent and Liberty Head Nickel boards, all Kent issues remain quite rare.

Whitman Publishing Company — A few new varieties turned up in 2009, but these were mostly minor variations of known boards. One notable exception was the confirmation of W2¢A3b, a Two-Cent and Three-Cent board previously unknown in the Third Edition. Presently unique in my own collection, I would be delighted to have a second example to offer my customers. Whitman boards are always the best sellers, at least in terms of volume, though the most common ones don't command much money except in the top grades. These make for great eBay material, and I suspect that quite a number of them are being filled with coins. All Y Edition boards remain exceedingly rare, and these will be the first to go up in value when times get better.

Colonial Coin & Stamp Company — I was able to make no significant purchases of this brand during 2009, and the small hoard of choice pieces I acquired a couple years ago is nearly exhausted. This was limited to just three titles in any case, and all other Colonial brand boards remain nearly unobtainable in grades higher than F-VF. I would dearly love to upgrade some of the pieces in my own collection.

Lincoln Printing Company — Last year I observed that "These boards are very rare in anything but heavily worn condition," and this remains the rule. Perhaps because they are so graphically plain, Lincoln boards don't command much respect and don't bring the high prices they deserve. Any example grading VF or better should be put away for the future, and this is where not following the herd is the right move. A few minor new varieties have surfaced over the past year, but there doesn't seem to be a lot of interest by collectors in obtaining more than one of each title.

J. Oberwise & Company — Homely and rather common in the overall numbers found, Oberwise boards are every bit as rare as the Lincoln brand in choice condition. They sell poorly on eBay unless filled with coins, and I never seem to get them in the top grades that will satisfy serious collectors. This is another area in which the more astute buyers will have an edge by putting them away when they do become available.

Earl & Koehler — Only one E & K board surfaced the entire year, and I was unable to purchase it. These titles are probably underpriced in the accompanying Value Guide, but without any real sales to prove it, I will leave the values where they are for now.

Gramercy Stamp Company — The story here is the same as for Earl & Koehler. This very rare publisher's boards didn't surface at all during 2009. All I can say is buy any one that turns up, regardless of condition. If you don't want, I'll buy it.
